

Summary of State Actions: Medicaid & Housing Services

Updated Spring 2026

INTRODUCTION

States recognize the importance of addressing Housing Related Services (HRS) to improve health outcomes while simultaneously reducing Medicaid spending. As a result, a growing number of states have approved Medicaid waivers and State Plan Amendments (SPAs) that cover HRS and other supports to address HRS. Additional states are using an “In Lieu of Services” strategy to offer housing services to Medicaid beneficiaries served by Managed Care. All these programs include the ability to access Medicaid funding for supportive housing services and gives states the potential to scale the evidenced-based model of supportive housing.<sup>1</sup> CSH is also advocating that states adopt six additional strategies to ensure that these new housing support services lead to the creation of more supportive housing. The first and most important of these strategies is to align affordable housing with HRS at the systems level.

States are using Housing Related Services (HRS) to scale supportive housing models, so that states can address chronic shortages of supportive housing and continue to address non-medical needs of Medicaid members. Persons who are experiencing homelessness and housing instability seldom are able to interface effectively or efficiently with the healthcare sector and need additional supports to do so. Many persons who are institutionalized in nursing homes, behavioral health residential care or group home settings could benefit from supportive housing, but capacity is limited in every community. States are also looking to expand supportive housing to serve new people and populations and ensure that people live in the most community-integrated setting possible to comply with the Olmstead decision.<sup>2</sup> Finally, states embrace supportive housing as a cost-effective alternative to institutional care and are slowly building the systemic linkages needed to expand supportive housing capacity.<sup>3</sup> CSH encourages communities to integrate People with Lived Expertise in their processes to expand supportive housing capacity and quality as those closest to the issues are best positioned to offer effective solutions on the ground.

Approved Medicaid 1115 waivers in several states now cover recuperative care (or what the homeless sector calls Medical Respite) and six months of housing assistance. Given the nation's affordable housing crisis, linking those persons to long-term housing options such as supportive housing or other long-term affordable options will be crucial to this demonstration model's success. According to CSH's analysis, 31 states and Washington D.C. have been approved to cover HRS via their state Medicaid plan. Twenty-four states and D.C. have implemented those Medicaid authorities and now have programs that are classified as "operating" below. CSH's map can help you find where your state is in this process. States are likely to face significant revenue shortfalls in their FY 2027 and 2028 budgets, and these new programs will need strong advocates to ensure continued operations.

States continue to screen for non-medical needs that impact health outcomes, and this includes housing instability and food insecurity. Screening data, if made public, can be used to advocate for continued coverage of these services via Medicaid. Data on homelessness and housing instability will likely differ significantly from the Department of Housing and Urban Development \(HUD\) Point-in-Time Count and the numbers should be used collaboratively to better estimate need.

States' health and Medicaid systems are developing networks of non-traditional providers who can address the challenges faced by Medicaid recipients in these areas. The screenings will produce new and better data around what non-medical needs are not being met and communities' abilities to address those needs. While healthcare organizations will use this information to make referrals for assistance, local systems, in the current climate, generally do not have the capacity to assist all who need help, particularly with a significant new source of referrals. The supportive housing industry is watching closely and hopes to use that data to better make the case for needed new affordable and supportive housing resources.

The Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) views HRS services as part of the state’s Home and Community Based Services (HCBS) program, so states are integrating these new services into existing programs and systems. HCBS programs are particularly vulnerable right now because they are optional state services, and there have been concerns about fraud in the program amid an increased federal focus on fraud. State Waiver approvals include several administrative requirements familiar to HCBS programs including Settings Rule compliance, Person-Centered Plans and Conflict of Interest requirements. Twenty-two states have Managed Long-Term Services and Supports (LTSS) programs, and states may choose to administer the program through a Managed Care delivery system with providers billing Managed Care Organizations (MCOs) for these services. CSH has also seen value in a Third-Party Administrator (TPA) delivery system in which one entity is responsible for the traditional MCO role, but is also tasked with onboarding non-traditional Medicaid providers, commonly called Community Based Organizations (CBOs).

States with approved HRSN waivers if they can show cost savings, may have the strongest case to continue these services, past the ‘research and demonstration’ phase of an 1115 Medicaid Authority. CSH’s analysis estimates that 10 states (AZ, AR, CA, CO, IL, MA, NJ, NC, OR and WA) have all the approvals needed to implement their non-medical services waivers at this time.

The table on the following pages highlights actions the states and the District of Columbia have taken to create and implement service delivery and financing of Housing Related Services (HRS) that are now commonly delivered by supportive housing providers through other funding sources.
